United Strengths

Sedus Stoll Group

The Sedus Stoll Group brings together diverse areas of expertise, forming a shared understanding of the workplace. Sedus, Klöber and S³ Advice each bring their own focus and perspective. What unites them is the conviction that office work succeeds when furnishings, ergonomics and workplace strategy are conceived as an integrated system.

The Sedus brand develops and manufactures holistic furnishing solutions with a clear focus on ergonomics, design, durability and circular solutions. The Klöber brand complements this perspective with a strong specialisation in seating furniture and a distinctive design signature. S³ Advice expands the scope to include analysis, planning and strategic consulting, helping companies to develop their workplaces through data-driven insight and strategic expertise.

The Group supports its clients from the initial analysis through to the practical design and long-term development of their working environments. This approach lays the foundation for solutions that are tailored to the actual needs of organisations whilst placing people at the centre.

The Group's financial foundation is based on a unique ownership structure. The Sedus Stoll Group is majority-owned by the Stoll VITA Foundation and the Karl Bröcker Foundation. Both pursue charitable objectives in the fields of health, education, the environment and social support.

We bring together complementary expertise that forms a shared vision of the workplace. Sedus, Klöber and S³ Advice each contribute their own strengths and perspectives. What unites them is the conviction that successful workplaces emerge when furniture, ergonomics and workplace strategy are considered as one integrated system.

Shaping Change

Since its founding in 1871, Sedus has developed solutions for the workplace and helping to shape its evolution. From the first bentwood chairs, a deep understanding of ergonomics, movement and the relationship between people and the workplace emerged over decades.

Today, office culture is undergoing a fundamental change. Work is increasingly hybrid, flexible and interwoven with urban life. New places of work are emerging, boundaries are dissolving, and with them, expectations for spaces are changing. Places for meeting, exchange and concentration are becoming equally important.

This development is evident not only in the office but also in the urban context. The growing number of co-working spaces and so-called “third places” is transforming the character of cities and at the same time shaping the demands on work environments. As a result, qualities such as openness, flexibility and the quality of experience are gaining increasing significance.

Sedus responds to these changes and translates them into concrete solutions. Products are becoming more versatile, spaces more adaptable and concepts are creating new opportunities for collaboration and individual working methods. At the centre of this development is the Work Café. It is more than a room type. It is a social hub within the workplace, a place for meeting, exchange and informal communication. Here, connections are formed, ideas are shared and innovation is sparked going beyond purely functional requirements.

With concepts such as “Design to Connect”, Sedus creates spaces that make these qualities visible and tangible. New places such as the Sedus Hub in Düsseldorf bring this vision to life and connect the world of work, design and the urban context. In this way, Sedus develops workplaces that can adapt while providing a sense of orientation.

A Legacy of Progress

the art of sitting

Klöber stands for an approach that has developed over decades and continues to guide the company today. Since its foundation in 1935, the company has aimed to develop seating furniture that puts people at the centre and supports healthy working. From this early engagement with ergonomics, a deep understanding of movement, comfort and individual adjustment emerged. This knowledge shapes development to this day and forms the basis for products that are not only highly functional but also have lasting design quality.

At the same time, Klöber has developed its own distinctive design language that combines technology, material and design. Seating furniture is not conceived in isolation but understood as part of a larger whole. It helps to define spaces and create atmospheres that enable both focused work and meaningful interaction. The company's location on Lake Constance reflects its commitment to quality, precision and a close link between craftsmanship and industrial manufacturing. Here, products are created that are designed for longevity and stand out for their clarity and exceptional quality.

As part of the Sedus Stoll Group, Klöber contributes this perspective to a broader understanding of the workplace. This creates a sense of continuity that does not dwell on the past but looks ahead and sees design as an ongoing process.

Connected Intelligence

With S³ Advice, the Sedus Stoll Group broadens its understanding of the workplace to include a strategic and analytical perspective. At the heart of this is the question of how spaces, organisation and use can develop together. The demands placed on workplaces are changing fundamentally. Hybrid working models, digital processes and new expectations for collaboration are causing companies to question their structures and realign them.

S³ Advice supports this transformation. By combining data analysis, planning and consultancy, a robust picture emerges of how spaces are used and where change can create the greatest value. Decisions become transparent, developments measurable and potential becomes visible. Spaces therefore emerge from concrete needs. They support collaboration, provide clarity in everyday work and accommodate different ways of working. At the same time, they are continuously reviewed and further developed.

S³ Advice stands for Smart Space Solutions and combines analysis, consultancy, planning and digital expertise into a holistic approach. The team lays the groundwork for evaluating change with confidence, steering it purposefully and turning it into effective solutions. Above all, companies gain clarity, confidence and a reliable basis for decision-making. Together with S³ Advice, they develop tailor-made solutions, reduce risks and lay the foundation for attractive, high-performing and future-proof workplaces.
